The University of Houston-Downtown is committed to integrating democratic learning across curriculum, creating opportunities for students and community members to be civically engaged, and producing a participatory and knowledgeable citizenry. Through a number of student led events like Walk2Vote and faculty led initiatives like “Building Democratic Classrooms,” UHD works towards its goals of increasing civic participation on its campus throughout the year.

The Student Government Association (SGA) of the University of Houston-Downtown hosts an annual event, Walk 2 Vote, which is the culminating event for much of UHD’s civic engagement efforts. Since its founding in 2012, UHD’s Walk 2 Vote event has been responsible for over 6,000 new voter registrations and has had over 2,000 individuals march to the polls and participate in early voting. A wide range of celebrities and community leaders have participated in the Walk 2 Vote event including musicians, dancers, locally elected officials and players from Houston sports teams. This year over $5,000 was raised and dedicated by SGA and the University of Houston-Downtown’s administration to the Walk 2 Vote event to ensure its success. With the help of local universities, community colleges and high schools, Walk 2 Vote Houston hopes to register 10,000 citizens to vote and have over 5,000 people march to the polls at this year’s event. To ensure maximum participation in the actual voting event at Walk 2 Vote, SGA hosts several smaller preparation events. These events include organizing a Voter Deputy Training in order to register their peers to vote and months-long voter registration and pledge-to-vote drives.

The Center for Public Deliberation (CPD) will be hosting an event in which approximately 100 UHD students, and dozens of diverse external Houston-based organizations and citizens will participate in a moderated deliberation on the topic of the public citizenry’s role in 21st century American politics. The purpose of this deliberation is to provide space where people can come together to work across their differences, think through tough choices and struggle with real trade-offs. The event also allows students and community members to focus their resources and time on growing understanding among people, finding areas of common ground and building public will.

This deliberation event, which is being held in conjunction with the Walk 2 Vote event, invites UHD students, high school students, business leaders, alumni, faculty and staff to participate in meaningful and intentional discussion. CPD has allocated $3,000 for this initiative in order to provide breakfast and necessary materials for the event's success. The Center for Community Engagement and Service Learning has also dedicated $2,000 to provide lunch for deliberation attendees.

Additionally, CPD is embarking on a five-year initiative to support faculty across the curriculum to be more intentional in the development of democratic learning experiences in their classrooms and facilitate high impact experiences for the students. Democratic learning encompasses all the 21st century skills, including problem solving, critical thinking, collaboration and team work. The initiative will embark on a five-year commitment with plans to reach upwards of 750 students the first year and get commitments from 15 faculty representing a variety of disciplines. The work is initially being supported through a $120,000 grant from the Kettering Foundation and a $6,000 grant for faculty stipends during the 2016-2017 school year from the UHD Center for Teaching and Learning.

Integrating Democratic Learning Across the Curriculum

The Center for Public Deliberation will embark on a five-year initiative to support faculty across the curriculum to be more intentional in the development of democratic learning experiences in their classrooms and facilitate high impact experiences for their students. The Democracy Imperative defines “democratic learning/education” to “describe experiences that teach the knowledge, principles, and practices valuable to a democracy as both a form of government and culture.” They differentiate “civic learning” from “democratic learning” noting that the former, “while extremely valuable, are often apolitical or separate from learning for and about democratic governance and culture (e.g. volunteerism, service learning).”

Democratic learning encompasses all of the 21st century skills, including problem solving, critical thinking, collaboration and team work. The initiative will embark on a five-year commitment with plans to reach upwards of 750 students the first year and initial commitments from 15 faculty representing the following disciplines:

- Arts management
- Chemistry
- Criminal Justice
- Fine Arts
- Health Communication
- History
- Management
- Mathematics
- Media Communication
- Organizational behavior
- Physics
- Political Science
- Psychology
- Public Deliberation & Communication

CPD will work to integrate “democratic learning” with faculty along five streams, including:

- Stream of Engagement 1: Explore Fundamentals
- Stream of Engagement 2: Implement Faculty-led course-integrated objectives.
- Stream of Engagement 3: Implement Student-led course-integrated objectives.
- Stream of Engagement 4: Connect democratic learning with action and/or service learning.
- Stream of Engagement 5: Create new ways of working and integrating.

CPD will also work with faculty to make sure their work and their student’s work receives recognition on tenure and promotion considerations.
